

These are kids. (Relatively speaking.) They are having fun despite the fact that things are kind of crappy around them. They are exploring and dreaming about the past, about what things were like before. They are surrounded by decay, but they don't see it that way. There's light, and there's hope, and even after the end of the world, there are still kids willing to explore. That's what we're looking for. Hope and adventure.

